WHERE GRANT SHOUD LIE.

Would not a suitable place for Grant's monument be the spot where he stood when he received | Hereby announces himself as a candidate Lee's surrender? There can be no more fitting spot for the ashes of this great commander than this, where the successes of his military career were crowned by the act which broke the backbone of the rebellion. His life for some time proceeding this had been one of hardship and mental anxiety. He had been fighting the Confederates in the front and a much worse class of traitors in the rear.

The press of his own side had libeled and misrepresented him, and he was handling his troops in a campaign where the loss both by battle and disease, was one of the most fearful death rates of said State Convention be apporhistory. It was fortunate for him | tiened as follows: that he inspired his men with confidence in his ability to see the outcome better than they.

They could not have fought the battle of the wilderness under any other commander. He fought it with brains and bayonots and crowned the whole with the final victory of the war. In his hour of triumph he declined to humiliate Lee by demanding his sword and told the conquered Confederates to take their horses home for the spring plowing.

Here is the spot if anywhere in America, where Grant's ashes should rest and if the people of the South should deem it appropriate to place Lee's alongside there would be no objection from the North and the last resting berg, E. S. Hoge and J. T. Banplace of these two men would be pointed to as the final sepulchre of all the bitter memories of the war of rebellion.

Prosperous Pioche.

In the last Pioche Record that reached this office, we notice the recording of 12 new mining claims in the immediate neighborhood of Pioche. That shows that the thrill of the approaching railroad is already being felt in that section. Pioche was an old camp fifteen years ago. It was thought ten years ago that its glory, had departed forever, and yet, with a railroad one hundred miles away with only a railroad grade near the town, twelve new locations are made and recorded in a single week-mines that were abandoned years ago are yielding now rich ore, and the residents there confidentially hope that the glory of the place, will return and that its second prosperity will be equal to, if not greater, than the first. All Nevada needs to restore its old prestage and make it the first among mining states, is rapid and cheap communication. Whether it will ever be blest that way remain to be seen. We are strong. ly in hopes of being, before many days, in a position to record the commencement of a new railroad in that direction which will be rushed with all reasonable energy to a point where the dullest eyes can see that to extend it further would be the wisest act that ever a railroad company performed. -Salt Lake Tribune.

Admiral Gherardi, who is in the command of the new cruiser Baltimore, would not allow newspaper men at the recent banquet to President Harrison on board of his vessel. Henceforth Admira Gherardi's life is likely to be fulll of gall and bitterness. He will be surprised at the great vigor with which the trodden newspaper worm can turn.

Hok Lo Chun, a boxer, living in Hong Hong, recently posted placards daring a rival, Lau Kawn, to meet him for a trial of skill and $10 a side, but the police tore down the placards and put Hok in hoc, with an utter disregard of the Marquis of Queensberry's rules. As the eminent Mr. Sullivan, of Boston, would observe, Hong Hong is a slow town.
